Dear Sir,

In "A Letter from the Publisher," in your issue of October 27 1975, speaking of diverse minorities, you mention that your correspondent in Ankara interviewed the Kurds. I wonder if he ever thought of investigating the condition of Turkish minorities in the Balkan states, including Western Thrace, where the entire population are Turkish.

Dear Mrs. Morali:

The main focus of our October 27 cover story about separatism was on the ethnic minorities of Western Europe. In preparing the story, our correspondents provided information about a great many separatist groups including those in Cyprus, Turkey, Greece and Yugoslavia. But we found so many minorities that to treat the subject in any depth we were forced to limit our focus. Thus we concentrated mainly on those groups in Britain, France and Spain. We mentioned the Turkish Kurds in our Publisher's Letter to point up one of the more obscure ethnic groups we discovered in researching the story.

Thank you for mentioning the Balkan Turks. We appreciated your interest in this ethnic minority, and perhaps we may cover them in a future issue.

Sincerely,

Marilyn Murphy
